The play opens with the couple, John and Mary, in their living room. They are sitting on the couch, staring at each other in silence. The only sound is the ticking of the clock on the wall. John reaches out and takes Mary's hand. He tries to say something, but the words get stuck in his throat. Mary looks at him with tears in her eyes. She knows what he wants to say, but she can't bring herself to say it.

The couple's silence is broken by the sound of the doorbell. John gets up and answers the door. It's their friend, Susan. Susan has come to check on them. She knows that they've been having a hard time since the death of their child. She gives them a hug and tells them that she's there for them if they need anything.

John and Mary invite Susan inside. They sit down on the couch and talk for a while. Susan tells them about her own experiences with grief. She lost her husband a few years ago. She tells them that it's okay to feel sad and angry. It's okay to cry. It's okay to take your time to heal.

John and Mary listen to Susan's words. They feel a little bit better. They know that they're not alone. They know that there are other people who have experienced the same kind of pain that they're going through.

After Susan leaves, John and Mary go to bed. They cuddle up together and try to sleep. But they can't stop thinking about their child. They miss him so much. They wish that he was still here with them.

In the middle of the night, John wakes up. He gets out of bed and goes to the window. He looks out at the stars. He sees a shooting star and makes a wish. He wishes that he could see his child again.

The next morning, John wakes up feeling refreshed. He goes to the kitchen and makes breakfast for Mary. He brings her breakfast in bed. She smiles at him. She knows that he's trying to make her feel better. She appreciates his efforts.

After breakfast, John and Mary go for a walk in the park. They walk hand-in-hand. They talk about their child. They talk about how much they miss him. They talk about how they're going to move on with their lives.

As they walk, they see a group of children playing. The children are laughing and having fun. John and Mary stop to watch them. They smile at each other. They know that they're going to be okay. They know that they're going to find a way to move on.

Entertaining Angels is a moving and powerful play about love, loss, and the power of forgiveness. The play is a reminder that even in the darkest of times, there is always hope. There is always light. There is always love.
