From Carnegie Mellon to the World of Business

Mackenzie Blue Tina Wells embarked on her entrepreneurial journey at the tender age of 18, when she successfully launched her first company, SheaMoisture, while she was still a student at Carnegie Mellon University. With an unwavering belief in her vision, she worked tirelessly alongside her mother, Richelieu Dennis, to create a line of natural hair care products catered specifically to the needs of women of color.

Through strategic partnerships and a deep understanding of the market, SheaMoisture quickly gained a loyal following and became a pioneer in the natural hair care industry. Wells' exceptional business acumen and dedication played a pivotal role in the company's exponential growth, leading to its eventual acquisition by Unilever in 2017.

Empowering Women and Youth: Beyond Business

While her entrepreneurial endeavors brought her immense success, Wells' commitment extended far beyond the realm of business. She dedicated herself to advocating for the empowerment of women and youth, recognizing the vital role they play in shaping a more equitable and prosperous society.

In 2013, she founded SheWorx, a collective and platform specifically designed to connect and empower female entrepreneurs. Through mentorship, networking opportunities, and access to resources, SheWorx has fostered a vibrant community of women business owners and leaders. Wells' unwavering belief in the power of collaboration and support has transformed SheWorx into a thriving ecosystem for women to learn, grow, and achieve their entrepreneurial aspirations.

Recognizing the importance of education and mentorship for young people, Wells also established the Tina Wells Foundation. This non-profit organization provides scholarships, mentorship programs, and entrepreneurial training to budding entrepreneurs from underserved communities. By investing in the youth, Wells aims to create a ripple effect that will inspire future generations of innovators and change-makers.

Unwavering Advocacy: A Voice for the Underrepresented

Throughout her career, Wells has consistently used her voice and platform to advocate for the underrepresented. As a vocal champion of diversity and inclusion, she has spoken out against systemic barriers that hinder women and people of color from fully participating in the economy.

Wells' powerful advocacy has earned her recognition and accolades from various organizations. She was named one of Fortune's "Most Powerful Women Entrepreneurs" and was honored with the "Visionary of the Year" award from the Black Enterprise Women of Power Summit. These accolades serve as a testament to her unwavering commitment to creating a more just and equitable society.

Wells believes that true progress comes from investing in women and youth, creating inclusive opportunities, and breaking down barriers that prevent individuals from reaching their full potential. Through her entrepreneurial ventures, advocacy work, and philanthropic efforts, she continues to inspire and empower others to make a positive impact on the world.
