The True Blue Unit is an elite, highly trained unit within the Australian Federal Police. They are responsible for protecting government officials, foreign dignitaries, and other high-profile individuals.

The unit was formed in 1996 following a security review of the AFP. The review found that there was a need for a dedicated unit to provide close protection for government officials and other high-profile individuals.

The True Blue Unit is made up of police officers who have undergone rigorous training in close protection, defensive driving, and firearms. They are also trained in first aid and other emergency response procedures.

The unit is based in Canberra, but it can be deployed anywhere in Australia or overseas. The True Blue Unit has provided protection for a wide range of high-profile individuals, including the Prime Minister of Australia, the Governor-General of Australia, and the President of the United States.

In addition to providing close protection, the True Blue Unit also conducts security assessments and provides advice on security matters. The unit works closely with other law enforcement agencies in Australia and overseas.

The True Blue Unit is a vital part of Australia's security apparatus. They play a critical role in protecting the people of Australia from harm.

Training

The True Blue Unit's training is some of the most rigorous in the world. Police officers who are selected for the unit must undergo a six-month training program. The program includes training in close protection, defensive driving, firearms, first aid, and other emergency response procedures.

The close protection training includes instruction on how to protect individuals from a variety of threats, including physical attacks, kidnappings, and bombings. The defensive driving training includes instruction on how to drive in a variety of conditions, including high-speed pursuits and evasive maneuvers. The firearms training includes instruction on how to use a variety of weapons, including handguns, rifles, and shotguns.

The first aid and other emergency response procedures training includes instruction on how to provide first aid, CPR, and other emergency medical care.

Missions

The True Blue Unit's missions are varied and challenging. They provide close protection for government officials, foreign dignitaries, and other high-profile individuals. They also conduct security assessments and provide advice on security matters.

The unit has been deployed to a number of high-profile events, including the 2000 Summer Olympics in Sydney and the 2014 G20 summit in Brisbane.

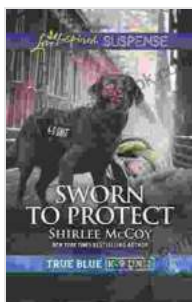

The True Blue Unit is also deployed to provide protection for Australian personnel overseas. In recent years, the unit has been deployed to Afghanistan, Iraq, and Timor-Leste.

Commitment

The True Blue Unit's members are committed to protecting the people of Australia. They are highly trained and experienced professionals who are dedicated to their mission.

The unit's motto is "Sworn to Protect." This motto reflects the unit's commitment to protecting the people of Australia from harm.

The True Blue Unit is a vital part of Australia's security apparatus. They play a critical role in protecting the people of Australia from harm.
